

Two Little Letters

And I'm supposed to listen
Well it just so happens
This time I'm in agreement
But I know enough to know
It's not always the case
And if someone tells me
Such is the case for them
Then who am I to say*

Two little letters
But they're enough to decide your future
And one carries more weight than the other
Receive this one and your life will be easier
One gives power, the other a dream
To have every door opened, or be forbidden
One single letter is given that decision
And to it, everyone listens
While you're left waiting

Two little letters, not much it would seem
But they get to choose who you should be
And what if you disagree
Are you bound to their ruling for eternity
Or is this a judgement I can fight
Take control back into my own hands
Try to make it right
So the rest of the world sees what I feel inside

Two little letters, just out of sight
You can take your time
Make your changes
But those two letters still remain
Hiding on your person
Like a bomb lying in wait
Waiting to expose you, when you least expect it
And there are those who will never let you forget it
They make it their mission in life to uncover it

Two little letters are all that's real
Like the life your living
Is just a dream that will end
Nothing more than a game of pretend
And these two little letters are a truth you can't bend
And maybe there's truth to what they say
I can't override my genes no matter what changes I make
But these changes are just as real
They can't take that away
So shouting from their lungs won't achieve anything
And it's a weird hill to die on trying to prove that your right

But nobody asked you to take up arms in my fight
Against two little letters
We might not always see eye to eye
But at the end of the day, they're still mine

*Two little letters
And I'm supposed to listen
Well it just so happens
This time I'm in agreement
But I know enough to know
It's not always the case
And if someone tells me
Such is the case for them
Then who am I to say*
